The company said that the U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission has authorized three bitcoin-related Initial Coin Offerings (ICOs) through 2017. It's taking place just as the SEC is finalizing its long-awaited decision about whether to regulate cryptocurrencies as securities or not. The technology behind bitcoin, introduced in 2009 by the mysterious Satoshi Nakamoto, is based on an online ledger known as the "blockchain." In a white paper, Nakamoto explained that the blockchain was "an open, distributed ledger that can record transactions between two parties efficiently and in a verifiable and permanent way." The way blockchain is used in bitcoin is similar to the way credit card companies use databases to track transactions. The databases must be updated and kept accurate for auditors to verify the financial transactions and ensure the money is flowing in the right direction. "Although the ultimate form of cryptocurrencies is unknown, the ability of blockchain-based networks to provide a trusted, digitized record of exchange with built-in auditability and verification may represent the single biggest advance in financial technology since the invention of the bill of exchange," said U.S. Securities and Exchange Commissioner Daniel M. Koelle. Head of the SEC's Cyber Unit. "No one can predict when the transformative possibilities that distributed ledger technology will hold will be realized, but it's certain that the SEC will continue to keep a close eye on the cryptocurrency space." As of Friday, there were about 12 million bitcoins in circulation, according to Wright.
