A 10-fold increase of the number of new cases of tuberculosis among the bone marrow transplant recipients had been registered in Czechoslovakia over the last few years and most of these patients were children and adolescents. Because of the profound immunodepression accompanying these patients, the efficiency of tuberculin tests used for the assessment of immunity in immunocompetent patients was markedly reduced. The most popular laboratory method of defining immune competence was the Mantoux test, the tuberculin test using the intradermal Mantoux method and intradermal PPD RT-23. The results of Mantoux and PPD tests using the intradermal Mantoux method in bone marrow transplant recipients were compared with those of a control group of normal healthy adults. The Mantoux test with intradermal PPD RT-23 was also used. The efficiency of the first test was greatly reduced because of the profound immunodepression of the transplanted patients. The most used dose of Tb.D skin test was 10 TU and the most used length of test-readings was 2-3 weeks. The intradermal PPD RT-23 test was only slightly reduced because of the concomitant reduction of the host capacity to produce PPD. The authors show that the intradermal Tb.D skin test followed by the intradermal PPD RT-23 test can be a useful test to assess the immune competence of transplant recipients for early detection of active tuberculosis.Herring (Solvay) The Herring (or Solvay-Herring) scale is a hydrocarbon-based tool for use in fracturing oil and natural gas wells.
