Q: Activating SSL on Azure Cloud Service I have created a cloud service in Azure. It is an API endpoint. SSL is set up on the service. I used the wizard in Azure to add TLS 1.0/1.1/1.2. This works. But when I activate SSL, Azure does not actually activate the certificate. It works locally, but when I deploy the site in Azure, Chrome/FF keeps prompting for the certificate (shown when it asks for "Server auth certificate" not shown when loading a site normally). Is there a way to activate SSL in Azure without having to convert the certificate manually? Or is the wizard just not set up to handle this? A: I have the exact same issue and found the solution - it looks to be an issue with the certificate being self-signed. You need to add a special entry for it, as described here: Also, do remember to remove the exception later as it'll cause issues if it's left in. A: I also found this solution: Install the certificate (in this case you need to create a certificate for EKU server) Add that certificate to the Azure website A: Turns out this is a bug in the Azure SSL wizard, so I just created my own.

1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a method of and an apparatus for examining electrical characteristics of a device which is fabricated through a predetermined method.

2. Description of the Prior Art In the prior art, a device has been examined by a probe needle. In the probe needle method, a probe needle is inserted into a device to be examined, electric signals are applied to the probe needle and measurement is conducted in such a manner that the electric signals are outputted from the probe needle in accordance with the electric characteristics of the device. In this kind of probe needle method, a thin probe needle must be inserted into a device and, even if the device is, for example, a power MOS transistor, it is difficult to make the probe needle contact a source or a drain region of the power MOS transistor. Accordingly, it is difficult to measure electrical characteristics of the power MOS transistor. There is a possibility that minute residue as of
