They would always run out of gas and be forced to crash land. Most people who are 'Skyjunkers' have to reach somewhere near the ground on the first attempt, and then give up and fly lower. The falcon propeller and the aerodynamics of flight get easily confused without understanding the real world dynamics of altitude. This is a short article from Wikipedia that explains altitude, air pressure, and winds. This article is based on reading several sources, but primarily articles by Aviation Illustrated. Pressure falls vertically downward with height, but the rate of pressure fall is comparatively slower. The increase in the atmospheric density at greater heights is greater than the pressure decrease. Atmospheric conditions consist of temperature, pressure, and humidity. The atmosphere is the gaseous medium surrounding the earth. It consists of a group of gases present in the air. The temperature of the atmosphere decreases with the height. The atmospheric pressure decreases with an increase in the distance from the earth. The atmospheric air is good for flying due to the following reasons: Flight altitude increased Airflow conditions allow the aircraft to fly faster and to travel farther Reduced air resistance Wind generated by the movement of air
The wind is caused when warm air flows over a colder surface and creates a different pressure pattern. The gravity forces are created due to the 'compression' of air by the aircraft. Increases in pressure
