Web based Integrated Reference Management (iRM) iRM is an online workflow system that can be used to keep track of documents that are assigned to an individual, along with other data relevant to them. iRM integrates with a searchable archive, accessible from the system homepage, or any web browser window, which can be used to search for particular reference materials. The workflow management components of the system can be used to control the flow of information through the system using multiple action procedures, including comments. iRM can be used to organize, systematize, and archive information, like reports, correspondence, contracts, and, possibly, multimedia content. The system can also help implement an effective reference management system by providing a framework to catalog documents with searchable content, categorize them, keep track of who has been using them, when they were last viewed, and what the cumulative usage history of the document is. This integration of reference management, searching, and workflow is unique in the world of online reference management systems. Migrating to the new XScale
