Drug design to study receptor-receptor interactions. Receptor-receptor interactions play a central role in the function of the cell membrane. We have developed a test-system to screen for and analyze such interactions. It can be used as a tool to study the molecular basis for in vivo interactions between several ligand/receptor systems. In the test system the interaction between receptors on the cell surface is mediated by fusion proteins of the two receptors. The ability of this test system to detect receptor-receptor interaction in vivo and its applicability to study this biological phenomenon are presented.Q: Accessing a non-const version of a const data member from a const method I am doing a set of numeric algorithms which all use a shared resource which I have const-ified. However, the code is not thread safe so I am using a non-const version of the resource. I know that it is considered bad practice to use a non-const version of a const data member from a const method. I understand the reason for this and know it is bad practice, but this is not a common algorithm and I wanted to ask if there are any cases where it can be used. From my reading it seems like I have 3 options. Use the non-const method and use a const reference, so that the reference to the const resource cannot change.
