Monte Carlo calculation of photon transport in the human lung. Part 2: radiation dose distribution and dose assessment. This paper presents the results of a Monte Carlo calculation of the photon radiation dose distribution in a lung phantom. This calculation was undertaken to assess the type of dose distributions resulting from the radiation dosage in routine diagnostic radiology. The normal examination procedure consists of the administration of an intravenous contrast agent followed by a series of radiographs with different X-ray tube settings. In this study, we calculated the distributions of dose to a radiosensitive surrogate tissue (the nasal septum) during these investigations. The results of these calculations were then used to compare the in vivo dose distributions to the dose distribution predicted in a three-dimensional anthropomorphic phantom. We found that a slice of a phantom has dose equivalent values to the nasal septum that are comparable to those for the human nasal septum. Thus, the use of a phantom for dose assessment should not be restricted to the implementation of exposure assessment, but also includes a comparison of dose levels in an average adult. Changes in the quality of lymphocyte reduction in New Zealand separated rabbit sperm due to ageing or freezing. Rabbit sperm is mainly used for pre- and post-implantation manipulations. In a previous study, we showed that the semen quality in New Zealand separated rabbit sires decreases after artificial insemination (AI), particularly if semen is frozen. We demonstrated that a substantial amount of this reduced semen quality was due to the degradation of lymphocyte-poor semen (sperm with more than 50% lymphocytes and less than 60% total sperm) to lymphocyte-rich semen (sperm with less than 50% lymphocytes) over time during the practical application of the process. The deterioration process was less in the post-thawed semen. In this study, we aimed to understand whether the reduced semen quality observed was due to age- or freezing-related changes in quality. New Zealand separated rabbit sperm samples were collected at 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 months of age and as semen from a mature 4-month old rabbit, at different time points during the freezing process (before freezing, thawing, cooled, frozen). When compared to mature sperm, thawed sperm from 3- and 4-month old rabbits had a higher percentage of lymphocyte-poor sperm (49.3% +/- 13.8% and 26.4% +/- 8.7%, respectively, vs. 17.5% +/- 4.6%). The

Q: categorical type of or relation through multi-dimensional type of column I have this table structure ID +---+-----+-----+ | ID | products |...other columns... | +---+-----+-----+ | 1 | product 1 | selling price | | 1 | product 1 | selling price | | 1 | product 1 | selling price | | 1 | product 1 | selling price | | 2 | product 2 | selling price | | 2 | product 2 | selling price | +---+-----+-----+ Which products related with what product (or brand, manufacturer, retailer, channel...) I am making a demand base on ID, how can I get the sales of the products related with a product (B, for example).. For example, i want to find the sales of products 2 (related with B) in the last month or week. I don't have a primary key at ID, products is used like that to allow to look up a product based on ID. A: This works: SELECT products.products, MAX(vol_dat) FROM (SELECT DISTINCT id, product, (SELECT SUM(selling_price) FROM products
