What's new in Ascendant:

" many times, "nearly as much," the hole is, as it has been for decades, the _un_ running Joe, a media facade. That's so, writes Norval Morrisseau, the great Indian who has just written a new book, _Pow-wow Time_. (He writes in his boy's voice. In '76, I had dinner with him, and we talked about his childhood. I remember that, for him, for his memories, memories of things and people are the most important. He told me stories about the Ojibway who lived near the place where he lived, and who fished. He is not interested in the natural world, the wildness of the natural world, he trusts it, and what he trusts, he is good for. The same with what he remembers, and there is so much. He knows he'll die soon, but that's not why he has survived all these years. He adores those who were born before him. They'll die before him, and he knows that, too, but: they adored him, and he is not a man who has been wished dead twice; he is not a man who has ended up dead twice, or who has been a protective spirit in half a hundred villages and he is still alive, beloved.) That's a fact, but it's not remotely what goes on in the _Huffington Post_. Actually, it's getting worse. And it's because of internalizing the media as a civil religion. That's what it is, a _religion_, just as "the election" (because "[e]verything [is] politically charged!") is a _holy_ thing, and "the loony left" is, too, and "following and serving Jesus" is, and "the Israel that much of the Christian world has grown to love" is, and "the revival of Christianity" is, and "Jesus is your only hope." As _religion_, it is so easy to drive the news, to make it our own, and to be mad at the people who don't agree with us, no matter how much we might disagree with the "stats" that prove that our side is right. And it's so easy to think of the "other" side as infidels, as the ones who don't know, as those who don't have solid facts, or... anything. And so, the thing that
