The aim of this study was to determine the efficacy of panoramic radiography for the evaluation of periodontal status in an Iranian population. Fifty patients (25 females and 25 males) with a mean age of 30.5 +/- 5.3 years (range 18-47 years) were included in the present study. The patients were all scheduled for a periodontal examination. In addition, all patients received radiographic examinations. Panoramic radiographs were taken with E-speed (Kodak-A) film. The film was processed by a conventional method. Panoramic and periapical images were compared with clinical findings. No radiographic image showed the exact detail of all the anatomical areas of the mouth. If an image shows bone level, the amount of bone loss can be assessed. Radiographic images showed that the most common site for the first bone loss in the anterior teeth was buccal. The degree of the bone loss in this area was statistically significant (P The present invention relates to containers, and more particularly to a container for holding and safely dispensing animal feed, such

You can quickly access the properties of an object from the Properties palette, in the same way as you can from the Properties Manager window, just by selecting the object. Miscellaneous: Bringing it all together:Determination of myocardial infarct size using monoclonal antibodies: II. Immunohistochemical localization of cardiac troponin T in the early stage of ischemia. A mouse monoclonal antibody against troponin T was used to localize myocardial infarct-associated changes in cardiac troponin T antigen in the rat heart in a model of ischemia-reperfusion injury. Hearts were subjected to left coronary artery ligation for 30 minutes followed by 20 minutes of reperfusion. Infarct size was determined by triphenyltetrazolium chloride staining and by enzyme-linked immunosorbent assay. Myocardial infarction was associated with loss of contractile force and depressed high energy phosphate metabolism. Cardiac troponin T antigen immunoreactivity decreased significantly in both the septal and lateral regions of the infarct, but remained unchanged in noninfarcted regions. Cardiac troponin I immunoreactivity showed a similar pattern to cardiac troponin T in the lateral region of
