

Metal - Geek rock - Metal This theme game is created on the basis of the music "The Polynomial" by the group "The Black Angels". About the Group: The Black Angels is one of the most well-known metal bands in Russia (also on the whole world). Having already finished a 10-year tour around the world, the band members went to pursue other musical interests in 1991 and, since then, it is not heard from. The members of the group are very different in a number of ways, but one thing unites them - the ability to create serious, powerful music. They are not afraid to experiment, to try the hard way, and the result is a sound able to stand up to the best of them. The main vocalist is Andrey Polyakov, who also plays the guitars and the basses. Andrey was born on March 28, 1968 and has been working as a professional musician in the Moscow scene since the year 1990. To earn money, he first worked for Chl3n and then joined the band Dark Cyber. Currently he is the vocalist of the band Oceans, which was formed in 2005. He often collaborates with artists, such as Andrey Martynov (Dark Cyber), Alexey Sofronov (Black Devil) and Roman Levin (Digibeta). The drummer is Vladimir Truts. Vladimir was born on April 24, 1968. After graduating from the Army Artillery Academy, Truts became a part of a rock band called Bohemian Masons. After two years, Truts went to teach at a music school in Moscow. Soon enough, he became a full-time professional musician. In the 90s, Truts was in the band Paradox and later joined Dark Cyber. In 2007, Truts, Andrey and their friend Mikhail Kalinin, who is also a band member, came up with the idea of creating "The Polynomial". Since then, the group has been making music and performing live at almost every city in Russia and around the world. The guitarist is Roman Levin, born on November 3, 1969. He is often called just "Roman" or "Levin". Roman was born in Moscow and joined the band Paradox in 1992. The bass player is Andrey Martynov, born on September 16, 1968. In both commercial and military applications, the term "cyber-flight" has been used to describe electronically enabled unmanned aircraft. Designed to perform a specific task, such as replace or supplement a piloted aircraft, a functioning spaceplane or a robotic surface vehicle, flying through the atmosphere is made possible by providing an onboard means of propulsion. Civilian and military A commercially deployed aerial vehicle capable of taking off, flying through the air, landing, and resuming flight would be generally referred to as a drone. This term is often used to cover various kinds of vehicles that travel in ways other than conventional airline or highway passenger jets, such as the Parrot folding quadcopter, or military types including the Raven. The European Space Agency (ESA) uses the term microsatellite, more specifically micro-satellite, to refer to their orbital debris hunter. A "smart" drone, either private or military, with ground control and autonomy for surveillance, defense and other missions in domestic and international airspace, may be described as a cyber-flight. In the case of a Eurofighter Typhoon fighter, a "cyber-flight" can be used to describe the package of ground/air vehicle and the backbone software system consisting of the Vehicle Control System (VCS) and Autonomy Consolidation Carrier (ACC). The VCS pilot interfaces with the ACC. The ACC, a fully integrated computing element based on advanced processor architectures, is the core that runs the Eurofighter Typhoon's adaptive challenge response capability which provides combat and mission data to all aboard the jet. The VCS provides fundamental flight and mission critical system functions to the ACC. All combat aircraft in the US use direct radio or datalink as control links. Examples of this include the Airborne Air Navigation System (AAN), utilized by the US Air Force and other agencies. This is also the case for the F-22. Control links are beamed directly from ground stations to the aircraft itself using radio frequency. Elon Musk is reported to have coined the term "cyberflight" for a vertical take-off Vertical Take-Off and Landing (VTOL) aircraft he is developing.
