(But don't forget to send and get your Valentine's card on that day, otherwise your valentine will get mad!). In this example I used the trigger "It's Valentine's Day" The addin was designed in a way, that it supports several ways to use it. Adding a new trigger: You can add a new trigger by clicking on the + button in the "add trigger" dialogue. Editing a trigger: After adding a trigger you can edit it. Click on it and open the "edit trigger" dialogue. Importing a template: To add a template with your own wording into the addin, copy the file with the name of the addin (in the.vsto file of the addin) and open the "import template" dialogue. You can use the automatic-import as well as the manual-import function. Importing a text: To import an text file with your own wording into the addin, click on the + button of the "import text" dialogue and choose the.txt file. The addin supports several ways to use it. To use the "up-down" arrows of the addin-window you can use the hotkeys Ctrl+1/2/3/4/5 or click on one of the buttons/lists from the file list, depending on the current context. This addin also supports the possibility to run macros by invoking the macro-editor (if applicable), the last used trigger and the last used context. The example for this addon is a simple triggering of a macro with multiple (return) code elements. On the right side of the addin there is another example with code elements (but no macro). Features: • User selectable trigger (or context) • Adding new trigger • Editing a trigger • Importing a text template (simple use) • Importing a text template (manual use) • Export: Export a template with user-input as XML or VSTO addin • Include in a Word document • User-triggered macros • UI-designer: Designing the UI-interface Regards A: Microsoft asks that these be used for evaluation purposes b7e8fdf5c8
