Explore menu Thrifty Tip: Cooking with Salt I have a new technique that I have been using for weeks now and I want to share it with you. If you are one of those people who loves to use salt to flavor your foods and spice them up, then I want to share with you a new way to do it. I started using this technique when cooking with celery and stock. The only problem with the celery is that it absorbs a lot of the salt while cooking and unless you add another ingredient, it will be dried out before serving. So, I started adding some salt to the cooking stock. I use a teaspoon of sea salt, but you can use regular table salt as well. What I learned after doing this for a while was that the salt helps to reduce the acidity and bitterness of the celery while it cooks. This is something I try to do when I cook with other ingredients as well. I boil a lot of vegetables and then add some sea salt while it is cooking. I use sea salt because it is neutral and that makes the vegetable “pop”. While you are boiling your vegetables, it may make sense to add a few herb leaves too. After all, your vegetables don’t like to smell like salty onions or water. Just remember to chop the herb leaves up so that they cook along with your vegetables. This method is also great when you are cooking beans. You add the beans and the sea salt while you are boiling them in a pressure cooker. This way, you won’t have to worry about having the beans to absorb too much salt. My Thrifty Tip for the Day: My favorite thing to add to my cooking stock is some frozen corn. I don’t know about you, but I love corn in so many ways and cooking it with a little salt is a nice way to enjoy it. My Thrifty Tip for the Day: If you have an onion, chop it into rings and then push them down into the simmering stock. They will be softened and start to “pop”. I hope you enjoy my Thrifty Tip of the Week and if you want to know more about this technique, check out the links below: You Might Also Like 1 Comment I have also been using this method of cooking with salt when cooking beans. It is great because it cuts down on the time it takes to the depositors' claims against the trust's agent were claims against the agency, and that the corporation therefore is not entitled to indemnification. Undoubtedly, the corporation was indebted to the bank, but by reason of the limitations on the liability of the agency the bank was not the principal in the sense in which the word principal is employed in relation to the principal and agent. But we think it also must be conceded that the corporation, in asserting that the bank is liable for its negligence, is asserting a claim against the bank based on a contract which was the very subject of the arrangement under which the corporation assumed the obligations of the bank. The bank was the principal and had agreed to be responsible for the corporation's acts; and the corporation contracted to assume that responsibility and to pay the bank a reasonable compensation for the assumed responsibility. The corporation could not have obtained the bank's agreement to be responsible without assuming the obligation of paying a reasonable compensation. Consequently, in every sense and under the circumstances of the case, the corporation and the bank are principal and agent. The judgment was given against the bank for $10,000. The bank's motion for new trial asked for a new trial as to the bank only, and that part of the judgment was not disturbed. The bank, then, was the only party affected by the judgment, and that judgment was correct, unless it is a bar to the proceedings in equity to compel the corporation to take over the invalid obligations of the bank. The grounds upon which the district court, at the suit of the stockholder of the bank, appointed the receiver for the bank were stated to be the insolvency of the bank, its failure to pay its notes, and its failure to pay dividends, and the appointment of a receiver, under those circumstances, was a proper exercise of the court's jurisdiction. The court found that the bank was insolvent, that it had failed to pay its notes, and had failed to pay dividends; and it was on those grounds alone that the court made the appointment of a receiver. The insolvency of the bank and its failure to pay its debts is not denied. The bank is still a going concern. The directors have not been guilty of any act which has rendered the bank incapable of meeting the debts. On the contrary, the directors have met the demand for its payment by the payment of its assets to a receiver. Consequently the court's jurisdiction, to make an appointment of a receiver and supervise its administration, as prescribed by § 93, was not lacking.
