“My name is Lukas Mueller and I am Technical Director of FIFA 22 at EA SPORTS. As the driving force behind game AI and technology as a whole, we started a new working process together at the beginning of this year and I am thrilled to present you the results that we achieved during that process. Let me start by saying that creating the new Vision AI and the new Release AI are exactly what we had planned when we started FIFA 20 – but we made a few changes to the underlying technology and data analysis to make everything we put on the field and in the game play as realistic as possible. In addition, we opened up a lot of new possibilities that we will explore and prove with the upcoming FIFA demo later this year. The key to our success is: “big data, better AI”. What are the general requirements for AI? In general, there are three aspects that we need to take into account when creating any AI: The game engine The game play Data and technology The most important part of the game engine is the control system. This is where we collect all the data we need to produce the AI behaviour in the game. For FIFA, this is the Behaviour Tree System, the physics engine and the decision system. The BTS consists of the most important elements: Game State, Functional Elements, States, and Transitions. These elements are used to control the behaviour of the game state and the player. For example, you can change the game state to a new one by using a State Transition or a function. The game state can be a simple event, such as “A pass was created and the player has reached a set distance”. Or the game state can be a complex decision, such as “A situation has changed and the best move for the player is to kick the ball a short distance forward”. Second, we have the physics and collisions in the game, which are two important aspects in FIFA. If we want the player to make high-intensity contacts during a tackle, a player can’t fall down or can’t lose his balance. This aspect is controlled with a collision controller. Finally, the last part of the game engine are the decision making and decision system. For every mechanic in the game, there has to be a decision. In a simple decision, such as a tackle, the decision is between a good contact and a bad contact. For a

Q: How to integrate CDI and XML deployment I have a java web project that I would like to change to Java EE 7. There is a lot of classes I would like to move from my web to my core project. The difference is that I need to use JBoss management console to deploy XML files. The web project I have runs as a war file, so if I would not change anything there would be no problem. However, I'm having a problem with trying to get xml files deployed as well. In the past I've been able to, by simply dragging the file(s) to the "deploy" folder in my core project, it would be deployed on the server. However, this time around, I can't do this. Apparently, the CDI and JDK 7 project settings require me to select a different Source type. What this means is, I cannot deploy XML files anymore. I've seen a lot of guides on the web telling me how to change the set up, but none tell you how to change the set up for
