Amino-n-Butyl-Sulfonamide Glycosides as Novel Non-Invasive Optical Fluorescent Probes for the Detection of Intracellular Lipid Raft Membrane Proteins. A simple and sensitive fluorescent probe was designed for the detection of gangliosides in lipid raft membranes of living cells. The probe is composed of a fatty acid, amino-n-butyl-sulfonamide, and the fluorophore, 9-aminobenzo[c]furan-7-carbonyl. The amino-n-butyl-sulfonamide conjugated at the end of a glycoside (amino-n-butyl-sulfonamide glycoside) can selectively bind to lipid raft membrane proteins in the inner leaflet of the plasma membrane of cell. The fluorescence of the probe was strongly quenched through photoinduced electron transfer. In the presence of gangliosides (GM1, GM2, and asialo-GM2), the probe could bind with GM1-enriched lipid raft membranes in living cells. The binding of the probe to GM1 and asialo-GM2 was observed by confocal laser scanning microscopy and flow cytometry. The probe was also applied for the real-time quantitative detection of GM1 in living cells. The fluorescence-quenching property of the probe allows labeling of a wide variety of bioactive molecules in cell membranes.Q: Assistance: Request serialization I have the following serialize function which I use to serialize messages in a console application. I would like to split it out into a serialize method/function and a deserialize method/function. How would I go about doing this?

public String SerializeForm(string command) { char[] sb = new char[command.Length + 1];
  sb[0] = command[0]; for (int i = 1; i
