To illustrate, a substrate 3 of FIG. 1 comprises an IMD layer 4, a hardback layer 5, and a liner layer 6. A spray head 7 can be used to deposit dyes sequentially through fluid channels 11 through 14. The depositing of this single-film dye through all of fluid channels 11-14 can require between 15 and 20 seconds. Through the sequential application of dye, some of the dye components can run-off back to the spray head 7 prior to completion of the material. This run off can be caused by the slow diffusion property of the composites contained within the dye dispensing system 10. Run off can also be caused by other components causing run off. On some occasions, when a dye component is applied first, the subsequent dye component is imperfect and it can run-off with some of the previous applied materials. In the wash process, the equipment of the prior art used for dye finish is typically large, heavy and difficult to control. The placement of the film can be a very difficult task. The application of the film to the fabric can be a labor intensive process. In the dyeing process, the equipment of the prior art typically includes very large ovens which are difficult to control and easily can contaminate the dye components due to the rapid change in temperature required for the reaction. This is particularly true when annealing time is long. In the machinery used for application of heat to the dyed fabric, typically a carbon vapor is used to control the temperature of the oven. This can be a slow process which requires temperatures in the order of approximately 1400 degrees F. to heat the oven. On occasion, the carbon remnants can build up in the dye-lines to contaminate the dye. In other systems of the prior art, vacuum systems were used

The Voice Actor Industry: Well, it's pretty much like any other industry really. It follows the same basic process - Develop, Production, Casting, and Network - but under the anime industry, these steps are taken with much more efficiency and application. Producers are obsessed with making sure each project in each series is as good as it can be, and they're always on the hunt to find the best and brightest voice actors to take on the job. Over the years, some people have become stars in the anime industry. They've worked hard to build their careers and find that sweet spot where they just can't be topped. Production Bloom is a voice acting agency that's in the business of providing professional voice actors to anime studios. Since this is a unique industry, its operations are much more complicated than other companies. A Record Shop That Neglects Their Business Plan? In order to make money for the company, Production Bloom operates a record shop, where they sell voice acting materials as well as copies of the finished voice acting. While it makes sense in theory, this is a gamble in reality, as most record shops have no real intention of supporting their business in the long term. In order to survive in this business environment, a voice actor must have a solid reputation in the industry, and even that's no guarantee. Voice Actress This is a game about Keito Nagakura, whose real life friend convinces him to become a part-time employee of a voice acting studio to help with their staffing needs. But how does Keito Nagakura end up as a voice actress, and what kind of onsen story will he have to tell? INTENSE VOICE ACTING ACTION The mystery and drama of the voice acting industry is fully explored in the brand-new gameplay that presents a realistic view of how voice actors are cast and work. Without the help of narration, you'll experience this exciting industry in all its depth. Your choices, and the results of those choices, will affect the outcome of the game. WE ARE PROMISING -50+ hours of story -Two different heroine routes -Japanese voice acting by seasoned professionals -A mostly-realistic glimpse into the voice acting industry!(Quote from Studio Gainax) -Main characters are voiced by the cast of Space Harrier 2; series main characters are voiced by their real life talent.
