What's new:

“When Jeff and I think about our future together, painting will always be a strong part of it. If a gallery didn’t accept the concept of having an art book, the book would cease to be the agent for art, just as a repertory company would cease to be the agent for plays. Art-book publishers use the term “essay” and worry like Sisyphus, afraid that they will be out of commission if their partner disappears.” Paula Cooper To read about all of our newly released collections, just click on the title listed to the left, or to view previews click on the highlighted collection titles, located below. “To understand the nature of a book is very different from understanding the concept of a picture. Not only does one have to understand the process of making a picture, but one has also to assume a lively perception of the subject of art.... The publication of the book is mainly a kind of aid to an intelligent understanding of the process of making a picture.” The Painted-to-Order Catalogue Traditionally any painter will bring his or her paint to a photo lab for some basic retouching. We have taken this a step further by not only supplying some basic retouching, but we also refurbish the original print to make it exhibit like new. This means, in effect, the artist hits the canvas or retouches it so the photo quality is improved and perfected. The artist may also step forward and add their final touches to the painting leaving them, in effect, with a true one of a kind original. The process of creating your reflection can be longer and more demanding than you may have imagined, but the selection of hair, tattoos, scars, wrinkles, etc., can be pretty much perfect. The beauty of this process is the artist is also left with a personal original piece of art outside of a marketplace. Often artists will then ship the print to us, and we begin the finalizing process, with new ink applied, any necessary retouching to give the original print life, and then the high-quality engraved print adds the final finish to the image. The artist's personal message is now direct print and installed in the gallery with a Certificate of Authenticity. The artist also receives a royalty. It could take 2 months for the final purchase (which is the majority of the time), but this is well over half the cost of just
