I also tried to change its z-index but it doesn't matter. I have tried many tutorials but nothing works. A: on your css the z-index of the global element is greater than your two player elements' z-indexes but the global element covers it somehow because it is still over your player elements even tho they have a higher z-index.

What you could do is change the selector for the player elements to #player-0, #player-1, #player-2 and set your global element z-index to #global-button, #global-button: hover, #global-button: focus I've set up a fiddle here Q: OpenCV Capturing and displaying a video in very high frame-rate I'm developing a C/C++ game for a PC platform and I want to be able to capture and display a screenshot in very high frame rates. The data that I need to capture are generated by a modeling program and I need to be able to show the result as soon as possible. Therefore, I can't really wait to write everything down and call a function when drawing the screenshot is finished. The approach I'm currently using is to create a std::string with the data that I need to store and then use this string to draw every frame, maybe with OpenCV. But with a frame rate of 1 frame per second this might result in a lag. I was wondering if OpenCV can help me by writing the string to a video file and then open and display that file with a high frame rate. If not, what would you recommend? Using my own solution would require me to code everything from scratch. Maybe I should use a physics engine like Unity3D but what would be the point if I can get exactly what I need with OpenCV?

We'd love to hear what you think about this pack. If you like it, please take a few minutes to rate it on Steam!

Impressions: I was a little apprehensive about this pack when I got it, the screenshots looked too good to be true. Upon playing the battlers in game, I couldn't have been more surprised as Tyler Warren has become my favorite battler artist of all time. So far, I have tested every battler in this pack (except the last one), and they are all so amazing in their own way. There are no really bad pieces in the pack. In fact, I'd say that 90% of them are rather good. The few bad ones I can think of are the ultra rare battles, but most are fairly balanced (no pun intended). I can say that in this pack, Tyler has done something that I am sure many have been waiting for. He has gotten rid of his dragon components. Yes, that's right. The king of dragons is a completely different monster in this pack. The new dragons have their own special abilities, which are mostly the same as their original counterparts, but have their own tweaks to their moves and styles. The new Slime Monsters also have their own special attacks and features. Other than the special moves, they are the same as their original counterparts. Therefore, if you are looking for an original pack of battlers that are all great in their own way, this is the pack for you. I came to this pack pretty skeptical, being one of the only mainstays of the dragon-less realms I've seen. But Tyler has earned my new trust. Each slime monster feels slightly different and truly unique while the dragons are brought back to their former glory with larger, more powerful versions of their original selves. A great deal of love, care, and attention is put into this pack's artwork, and it shines through not only in the battlers but in their attacks, abilities, movesets, and every single other aspect of them. My only real complaint is about the rare battles, all of which are too hard for even the most battle-savvy playtester. The only difficult battle is Blue's, who somehow manages to beat her enemies despite lacking any physical attacks. And the game prevents the player from choosing particular levels

What's new in Salary Man Escape:

What a waste of time???? I'll never understand the rules on those contests!!! Sounds to me like him and the D. C. Police department have created a no win scenario for all!!! The winner says "D. C. Police department: That was fun!!!!" and the losers say???????. I say this is a scam to create a few more nightmares for the citizens of D. C. The announcers are sounding angry at Doug as he comes up with excuses after excuses after excuses.....why the police didn't catch him. They even brought up the fact that ONLY a pedestrian walking on the sidewalk and NOT riding a bicycle has to adhere to the rule. Now I cannot believe that people are walking up HILLS in the District of Columbia. Even in the heat of the summer, and they have literally NO rules. This shouldn't be happening. I don't want people doing this in our beautiful neighborhood. One, people have been climbing it for years, and multiple, people have pulled off riding in cars. It was called "no stunt" riding, so it was happening. Fat bikes AND motorcycles. What the heck. I also don't want people doing this on footpaths. The rules are messed up and for this reason, this incident was never addressed by the city. It's because they can't be sure if a cut and dried bicycle on a sidewalk is fine, or simply not. I'm all for less traffic in the city, but just because someone wears a suit, it makes them untouchable? People are being reckless and even they CAN lose their job!!!! I watched the whole thing in the hopes that they would stop debating whether poor Billy boy is a hero or let's just let him keep going...the discussion turns to whether or not he could be a hero? Seriously? You see, that's what the fuss is really about.....did he break a rule by riding this? Neither party will say yes or no. Instead, it will be withheld judgement because, it just might happen again soon and another little bald person could die. WTF? It was a beautiful experience and will be a memory to remember for the next 60 years. I wish more people saw it. If we're going to nitpick, he broke a secondary rule which is that a bicyclist cannot ride his bike on a rail bed (segment, edge) and must dismount to proceed. It doesn't base or attack your enemy. You can be a lone wolf, a team or a squad. The second type of games is the one with battles. You usually defend a battle area. The battle area is usually the "control points" on the map, like cities, mountains, mountains, valleys, rivers, lakes or oceans. You must destroy the enemies army or capture the area to force your enemy to retreat or surrender. But you can also play in mmorpg. You have land and sea maps to explore the environments, they will provide you with different types of quests or missions to do. You can choose one if you want to. A kingdom is a land-based story-based MMORPG like RuneScape, which is first published as an early game in Europe in November 1999 by British company Akella
