core/shell nanoparticles by a solvothermal method. A novel and simple solvothermal method was developed for the preparation of organic/inorganic core/shell composite nanoparticles. This method involves a two-step solvothermal process, in which 1,8-octanediol acts as both a solvent and a core material. An anion exchange membrane was used to separate the core material from the reaction solution. The core/shell structure of the as-prepared composite nanoparticles was analyzed by transmission electron microscopy (TEM). The average diameter of the microphase-separated particles was about 200 nm. The surface and cross sections of the particles were characterized by TEM and HRTEM, respectively. The effect of the size, shape, and core material on the optical properties of the organic-inorganic core/shell composite nanoparticles was studied. The wavelength and angle-dependent reflectance spectra of the composite nanoparticles exhibit strong potential applications in anti-counterfeiting and optical devices. f 1 5 1 5
