My Linux system doesn't even have a daemon. I don't see why it needs one. Why would someone make such a big deal out of it? Or is there a concept of a daemon that doesn't pertain to the Linux operating system, or else I'm completely missing something. A: Yuzu is a Linux program so it uses Linux daemons for a lot of things. In the case of Yuzu the reason that it uses a daemon is that is a good way to share I/O among multiple clients using a single source. So to use the command line interface the conversion process would need to fork and then do a lot of I/O over a bunch of files. Instead it uses a Daemon so that can be done for you at the same time. Yuzu is a very good and very easy to use program (my favorite) and so they want to help it be as easy to use as possible. Also it is much easier for them to determine if it was working or not (rather than get an error box on their console or terminal). Daemons can do a lot of things, in this case it's just to put the
