Q: How can I block access to a site and all its subdomains? I have an Arduino running some code and monitoring a temperature sensor via ifttt.com. The ifttt feed has been configured to check the temperature every minute via POST and block any access to the site and subdomains if the temperature has dropped below x. It's not the first time I am doing this kind of blocking via Cloudflare, but I have not been able to block access to the entire site despite setting the CF-HTTPX-Target and CF-RAY headers. Cloudflare has been very good at blocking access to the site but unfortunately it doesn't block the ifttt POST. The site automatically generates a new token when a new message is posted, but I can still access the ifttt app if the device is connected to the same WiFi network (so, no need for a token). I have tried the following: CF-SSL Setting the CORS headers to be "Always" Reconfiguring the website with CF-HTTPX-Target headers sent by the Arduino Adding CF-HTTPX-Target headers in my DNS forwarding settings (serverip:80, 80, 80) The only endpoint I don't get an error is cflinuxfs (although the same problem is encountered with the OPTION/TRACE requests). I am new to Cloudflare and maybe I am missing something obvious here? A: I discovered that ifttt.com uses JavaScript libraries, but some of them (including the blocking code) are not loaded when the site is accessed over HTTP. So when I changed the website to be served via HTTPS then everything worked. More info on this behaviour is available in this page on IFTTT's site: Concerns have been raised about dietary supplement products in the wake of a potential link between a popular fat-loss supplement and kidney failure, a popular weight loss product, and two recently released supplements without a qualifying scientific study proving efficacy. Are consumers being misled? An updated analysis of available scientific evidence suggests that many supplements are proven effective for the intended uses. However, in some cases, this evidence is based on only one or two studies. The numbers of studies showing a supplement's purported benefits should exceed any risk of Q: What is good quantization methods for using cosine similarity I am going to use cosine similarity for measuring the similarity of images. 1) What is good quantization method for using cosine similarity? 2) Can I use a distance measure of the form  $d=1-\cos(\theta(i,j))$  ( $\theta(i,j)$  is the angle between  $o$  and  $(i,j)$ ). 3) Any resource or detailed explanation about the what kind of image quantization is good for using cosine similarity. Thanks a lot A: As mentioned by @hanamizuri, what you are asking about is called the angle histogram, and since both humans and computers are angles, it is likely your data is in the form of angles. As also mentioned, this is a classic principal component based image analysis, which you can try a lot of examples on. For example, if you have a batch of images and you want to rank them from the most similar to the least similar, you can use PCA and all the eigenvalues you get will be the cosine similarity score. Another way is to do it as a semantic based image search, where you get the top retrieved images based on similarity.

Anna I and Spyridon I of Phrygia Anna I and Spyridon I (also known as Alpida) were the parents of Empress Theodora of Byzantium. Anna I and Spyridon I were the daughters of Basilus, a royal clerk. They were married to Thronomonchus and Stylianus, respectively. Thronomonchus was the uncle of the Roman emperor Justinian II. Stylianus was the nephew of the same Emperor. Anna I and Spyridon I were the guardians of the imperial couple Theodora and Justinian in the period from 9 January 527 to the death of the latter on 16 March 565. This period began when Justinian was seventeen and ended when he married Theodora on 14 May 548. After the death of Justinian, Anna and Spyridon were sent into exile. They settled in Philadelphia, and married descendants of Valerius, a general, as well as the groom of Theodora.
