EnjoyQ: Super Star Destroyer - fits in the Empire's galaxy-wide military In the movie Rogue One, Star Wars The Force Awakens, a super star destroyer appears at the end of the movie, because of the need to destroy the Death Star, created by the Galactic Empire, a totalitarian Galactic Empire whose territory extends throughout the galaxy. The hypothesis I have is that this warship was stolen by rebels against the Empire. Does this ship belong to the Galactic Empire or to the rebels? If it belongs to the Empire (because this ship does not appear in the books), are there any information about this ship? For example: its specifications, construction techniques, and/or numbers in service during the Empire's rule in the Galactic Empire's galaxy-wide military. What I have found is this link which for me don't solve my question, because the ship in this link has been built by the rebels for their own purposes. A: We don't know anything about the battleship in the movie, or the Empire's forces. Ships built for the Galactic Empire do exist, and we can deduce the general specifications from the movies. If you want to see a real life example, the US Navy use the Ticonderoga-class guided missile cruiser. In the movie, the leadership of the Rebel Alliance is in communication with their crews over the ship's intercom, which allows us to know a general understanding of these ships, based on information provided in other works. It turns out, however, that the Rogue One's ship has more in common with the Millennium Falcon than it does with the Ticonderoga-class cruiser. The Falcon is a prototype freighter built for The Rebel Alliance to combat the Empire's blockade (or a portion of the Empire's forces) by smuggling goods and personnel out of the Empire to join their cause in the Battle of Scarif. This ship does not have the kind of vast population of heavy turbolaser batteries or torpedo tubes that you'd expect on a ship of that size, but they do carry heavy turbolaser
