But it is returning a string like 1.00E-3. Below is the query, select cast(REPLACE(cast([Projected Runs] as nvarchar(10)), '0.0 ', '') as float) as [TotalCost] from [Archive_Project_Cost] where [Projected Run ID] = 7 The [Projected Run ID] is the primary key for the table. [Projected Runs] is a nvarchar(10) column. [TotalCost] is a double. The error that I am getting is: String data, right truncation A: You don't need to use CAST(this as NVARCHAR(10)) instead you can do this SELECT REPLACE(REPLACE(cast([Projected Runs] as nvarchar(10)), '0.0 ', ''),',','.') as [TotalCost] from [Archive_Project_Cost] where [Projected Run ID] = 7 (10.0-74.0 μmol/L, median: 35.4 μmol/L) as well as in serum (12.0-290.3 μmol/L, median: 48.1 μmol/L) and compared with dogs with non-malignant disorders. Moreover, a significant difference between the median values of PCV and LDH for the groups with malignant and non-malignant disorder was observed. One of the main findings in the current study was that all dogs with lymphoma had characteristic hyperbilirubinaemia. Moreover, this finding was probably due to rapid destruction of the liver cells, caused by the lymphoid infiltration and subsequent inflammation. Bilirubin and LDH concentrations in the serum of dogs with malignant disorders were usually much higher

As the paper slurry leaves the headbox it is first directed to a point off-center of the machine or, in certain high speed machines, to a cross-machine slit and then to the drying section. A number of technical parameters are regulated by the headbox, such as flow profile and consistency, and the flow of fibre is also affected by the headbox. The headbox serves two main purposes, to homogenise the fibre slurry and to apply the water to the fibre by a transverse flow. As a result, the uniformity of density of the sheet is achieved and so the suitability of the sheet for printing and subsequent mechanical processing is ensured. Additional functions that the headbox can perform are to assist in the drainage of the sheet during the sheet formation process, to assist in preventing incipient "web breaks" in the sheet and to regulate the flow of the sheet. The exact shape of the headbox plate affects the characteristics of the flow through the headbox and so the headbox plate is a crucial element in the operation of the machine. The performance of the headbox is a major contributor to the quality of the paper produced. The headbox is a fixed plate. The shape of the headbox is tapered. The headbox should have minimum clearance with the forming wire and the surface of the headbox should slope downwards towards the forming wire. The flow of fib
