What's new in Masters Of Puzzle - Halloween Edition: Haunted Mill:

Sunday, February 27, 2008 What is it about small people? When we were living in our house (in our dreamy, small green house) we had lots of power washer fiends in the neighborhood. They would arrive every day at lunch time and use their machines on their various cars, trucks, motorcycles and boats. I was about eight years old when the most resourceful one, George Edwards, came up with a fascinating and bold plan to take out an entire set of car wash brushes from the isopency aspirating brook as it flowed through the trees up our road. When the day of our wash came he showed up and grabbed an old navy water tank, tried to take it to the brook and shove it in. He tried to squeeze it in one of the entry holes but the brook was too strong for it. At that point, he stopped trying and began improvising. He settled on moving two garage doors on the sides of the tank, with a pulley attached, so as he moved the tank along, the garage doors moved backwards and forwards in synchronicity. Being 8 years old, I didn't get it. But it was magic and I could feel the inklings of my developing sense of wonderment. I would think back on it many times during the years we lived in that house and it always sounded like the movies I saw in my formative years. Like Double Indemnity with Barbara Stanwyck and Fred Macon. Not that I imagined the whole story---no, that was an adult live in my head--but somewhere on the journey home, I would wake up from my sweet dreams of silent movie magic to find myself in an old movie, sitting on the edge of the bed in my small green house, dreaming about being a Power Washing Machine God. The images were always the same, even as I became more conscious of what was happening... I saw George Edwards running and looking back to see if his wonderful contraption was still following him. I saw our beautiful brook being forced to itself up through the driveway by the backward movement of the two garage doors. I was also awake when he awoke at night. You could hear him start his little motorized wash to shake his brushes, begging his little bed to come forth with that delicious mis-haps that would wash his two dirty cars and trucks. I guess being only eight years old I wasn't thinking about anything beyond the joys of George
