Impact of the Botulinum Toxin Type A on the Quality of Life of Patients with Chronic Contraction Headache: A Case Report. Chronic contraction headache (CCH) is a common primary headache syndrome that can be associated with general distress and impaired quality of life. Botulinum toxin type

A has been successfully used in the management of patients with chronic migraine headache. This study assesses the impact of botulinum toxin type A on the quality of life of a patient with CCH. A 60-year-old woman with CCH was given botulinum toxin type A for 2 years. She was followed up every month over a period of 2 years. Before the injection and at each follow-up visit, the patient's quality of life was assessed using the Migraine-Specific Quality of Life Scale (MSQLS) questionnaire. The patient experienced an immediate decrease in the number of days during which she had headache and a decrease in the number of migraine days during the first month of follow-up. During the second month of follow-up, the patient noted a gradual improvement in her quality of life over a period of 2 years. Adverse events, such as rebound or placebo effect, or the fact that this is a case report do not preclude the presence of a placebo effect. However, the reduction in the number of migraine days, the sharp drop in the frequency of the headache attacks, and the immediate benefits for her quality of life support the efficacy of the toxin in the management of this disease.

The show was given a one-hour "make or break" series premiere in the NBC 11:00 Eastern hour on May 1, 1982. It received a poor response from critics, and the series was cancelled after thirteen episodes had aired. Plot The series focused on high-school guidance counselor Iola Haley, whose life and family are drastically changed by a deadbeat parent. Upon her arrival at the school where she works, she meets the
