of the most commonly used drugs, which are generally used in dentistry, is controlled by a variety of manipulations, such as infiltration, injection, irrigation and application. Local anesthesia consists of giving the patient a local anesthetic, administered by injection or oral, to either achieve a blockade or a reduction of pain. It is usually used for large areas of the mouth, or where dental work is necessary which could be painful. Effective local anesthetics There are many different local anesthetics. The most effective are lidocaine, articaine, prilocaine, bupivacaine and tetracaine. There are many other substances which are not very effective in local anesthesia, and can cause burning, swelling and skin numbness. In local anesthesia, 2.5% lidocaine is now the gold
