Alana Araujo alana.araujo@indystar.com On Thursday, Indiana House Speaker Brian Bosma told The Indiana Gazette he had no idea whether he would be able to get a vote on a proposal to combine Indiana's five liquor control boards into one statewide board. The IndyStar had reported that Rep. Ryan Dvorak, a Republican from South Bend, was working on a plan to form a new agency that would control liquor licenses statewide. The House was going to be out of session on Thursday, and Bosma said he had no idea whether the House would return to session on Monday. Bosma told The Indiana Gazette he was "surprised and very disappointed" by Dvorak's announcement. "I think it is very troubling," Bosma said, saying that it was "extremely premature" to discuss the impact of the proposal. 'The system is broken' On Tuesday, Dvorak announced he had reached an agreement with five Democrats to form a working group to address the state's liquor control board system. He said his working group would include attorneys, former government officials and an economic development expert. "I think we've got the right people to look at this problem and figure out what the right solution would be," Dvorak told The Indianapolis Star. Dvorak said the state's liquor control system is out of date and is designed for Indiana's pre-Prohibition days, when many of the state's cities and towns didn't have separate liquor boards. Dvorak cited some questionable behavior by liquor store owners including underage drinking on school property, underage and even adult drinking in cars, nuisance problems at sports bars and drinking in parks. Dvorak said the working group would eventually come up with a proposal for revamping the agency but would not be able to release it before the legislative session ends on Monday. What's next? State House rules say the House would be able to hold a final debate on Monday without a formal vote. Senate rules, however, say the Senate must vote on any debate on the matter to ensure that it has the authority to 6d1f23a050
