www.imdb.com What are the ladies and good thing to be done when a womans in trouble. The ones that start with an "R" to my dear wife: The young Pakistani lawyer, who lost his father when he was in his teens, has, unfortunately, been pushed into a corner by Jyoti (Sushmita Sen). Later in the night, when one of her meetings fails, she finds out that her mother's friend, Subodh (Anupam Kher) is here to meet her. She, however, likes another boy, Gaurav (Arran Khan), whom she goes to meet to quell the confusion. In the midst of a rather heated argument, Subodh and Jyoti arrive, and things take a turn for the worse. When Jyoti threatens to spit in his mouth for daring to insult her, his laddo (brother-in-law) winds up witnessing her in a compromising position with another boy. Next morning when Subodh is made to watch a bizarre fight between them, all hell breaks loose. It is then that they realise how wrong they are and everything that they had done. The rest of the film is how Subodh helps them out of their tangle and Jyoti's story of how she ended up with an immoral boy. The first half of the movie is good, but the second half was a waste of time, The actors, the situations and the dialogue gets the movie down.. For a movie of this language, the editing and some aspects of the story were poor. The women were actually seen in the last one hour of the movie. The songs were good and the locations were all quite good and impressive. The cinematography (Yohan Rasool) was also quite good. If you buy a ticket for this movie ask for the first half before the interval (First half : 2 hrs 25 mins, 2nd half :1 hrs. The movie should have been picked up and made in the beginning and instead of a half-written version of the screenplay was added a bit of freshness in it. Otherwise, the direction and story (written by writer-director Muzaffar Ali) were good, but it was quite a let down for me. Warning!! This is a stupid, childish and pathetic movie, and I have never seen anything like it. It makes you laugh, cringe and cringe some more. The first half was okay, the second half was very
