Expression of the entire 3'-untranslated region of MHC class I mRNAs in mice and primates. Major histocompatibility complex (MHC) class I proteins have a unique structure and function: they are transported from the endoplasmic reticulum and the Golgi apparatus to the surface of cells via the secretory pathway in association with class II molecules. An integral membrane component of this class II-class I complex is encoded by exon 9 of the class I heavy chain gene. Here we report that the mRNAs encoding the entire 3'-untranslated region (UTR) of class I heavy chain transcripts are expressed in the endoplasmic reticulum and Golgi apparatus of primate cells and in all mouse tissues examined. Cells depleted of the 3'-UTR were unable to transport MHC class I molecules to the plasma membrane. Thus the entire 3'-UTR is essential for protein synthesis, transport, and cell surface expression. Plectranthus asperatus Plectranthus asperatus, commonly known as the Rough-leaved Mint or Malayan Balsam, is a herbaceous plant native to South Asia. It is widely cultivated as a garden plant in the United States, in North Carolina and in Texas, where it has naturalized. A large number of cultivars have been selected for garden plants. Several cultivars have gained the Royal Horticultural Society's Award of Garden Merit (confirmed 2016). Description Plectranthus asperatus is an annual plant growing to around high. It has a basal rosette of linear to oblanceolate leaves. The leaves are less than long and less than wide. The leaves have some hairs on the upper surface, and hairs on the edges. P. asperatus carries flowers in long-stalked, racemose inflorescences (a family of flower structures). The inflorescences are in groups of from 3 to 6 flowers, each flower with a green tubular perianth and five white, villous sepals, up to long. The flowers are very fragrant and visible from great distances. The unusual shape of the perianth and the colour of the sepals are the two features which give it its
