I've always wanted to build a full scale basis for time travel experiments but I haven't started yet. I have been slowly collecting material since I was a kid and I think now is a good time to start. I have all the parts and I know I'm going to need some kind of money to start up. My question is what would be the best way to set up my basement? Do I buy an apartment? Do I buy an office cubicle? Do I buy an actual business? Do I rent a space in a commercial building? Do I go with a realtor? A: I recommend that you build a garage like this and then make an office above. Do I buy an apartment? No. You don't really need an apartment. A garage is more than adequate. Do I buy an office cubicle? Depends on how much space you need. It's bulky and expensive. A small cubicle is cheaper and more likely to fit your needs. Do I buy an actual business? You will need a business license. Do I rent a space in a commercial building? I haven't seen what a garage looks like but I imagine it wouldn't look like an office cubicle. Do I go with a realtor? You're already asking this question. The answer is no, you don't need a realtor. A: Do I buy an office cubicle? Even though this is a low budget approach, yes. You'll need a workspace, at least a bit bigger than your workspace at home, you can use that for storage, and you can have a place to work from. Do I buy an apartment? 6d1f23a050
