The Wingman Sitting in the bleachers, celebrating the win as the band plays the Fighting Irish fight song, I beam at the crowd. I look over at Michelle, who is sitting with her best friend from elementary school. She looks over at me, raises her fist, and screams in my face. At that moment, I became aware of the fleeting nature of everything. It will be my first, and only, High School Tailgate. I'll never see those kids again. Michelle will get out of middle school and move on to high school, college, and eventually husband and children. I will earn my Bachelor's, go to work, and hopefully retire by the time I'm 60. I'm 42 years old and have a life that doesn't necessarily seem like a "good" life. I have a wife and kids (we've since separated, hopefully for good), and I work for a company that does not pay the bills. My father was/is a carpenter, and told me when I was little that, "you are either a carpenter or a bum." I wish the carpenter part didn't be true. But, right now, I'm a dad, a husband, and a high school football dad. I'm a businessman that can't seem to get out of the offseason funk. While I wouldn't trade everything c6a93da74d
