i have been looking at world history for about 15 years and i have witnessed much suffering, pain, and death. i have seen much violence, torture, and cruelty in the world, i have seen people being starved to death or driven to suicide, i have seen people being raped and sold into forced labor, people being robbed of their homes, and many other atrocities. i have seen people enduring pain and suffering without feeling relief. but what is it that causes them to stay alive when they feel hopeless or that no one cares? what are they doing to try to survive and avoid death? and why do they have this strength to withstand so much suffering and pain? harry potter and me will take us into the world of harry potter to explore all of these questions and more. but mostly i hope to give hope to my readers. i hope to show you how, if you know someone who is suffering or going through something that is painful and difficult, to help them to make it through. i hope to give you a glimpse of how i try to help people who come to me for help. harry potter and me will be a part of a video series called "the help series", where i will create short videos on a variety of different topics. however, unlike many people who are interested in learning, or doing, or sharing a certain topic, i only have so much time in a day. i have no free time to spend learning new things and no time for social media. a lot of comments when this acquisition was announced referenced the fact that autodesk has no real electronic design software; if you combine a physical board layout software with an offering that helps you design for electronic hardware, then why not? once in the loop with the power of eagle, it would be real easy to take that physical board layout and just make it into the model from the eagle world.
