namaste. i have been reading your blog for a while and have learned quite a bit. i have one question regarding bhagavad gita. i have been reading that in the first line of chapter 7, first verse. lord krishna says "o arjuna, i am very close to you." my question is how much closer do we get to god by chanting the mantra. i know mantra is a great way to connect to god but is it really as closer as our lord krishna says in the first line of chapter 7. thanks, ravi my son has mastered the rudra mantra, which he has been reciting for a couple of years. we have always had a lot of health problems, but they have all been reduced. we are now going to the us, and hope to find a doctor there who will take us seriously. i just want to make sure that my son is not wasting his time with the mantra. we are going to a "cold" city, and i know that the climate there can be harsh. i'm worried that the mantra will be of no help there. dear sir, i have been reading your blog for a while and have learned quite a bit. i have one question regarding bhagavad gita. i have been reading that in the first line of chapter 7, first verse. lord krishna says "o arjuna, i am very close to you." my question is how much closer do we get to god by chanting the mantra. i know mantra is a great way to connect to god but is it really as closer as our lord krishna says in the first line of chapter 7. thanks, ravi it's usually believed that mantras written in sanskrit have to be recited "in the head" while chanting them or in front of a picture of the deity. but the real benefit of reciting a mantra is not in the mouth, it's in the head. the sanskrit mantra goes into the body and the effects are felt in the chanter's body. it becomes part of the chanter's life force. if you chant correctly, you can feel the mantra as a burning in your chest, or as a current running through your body. the mantra enters you and becomes part of you.
