In Adobe Bridge, you will find a new icon for the StarAlign software that creates masks for the stars. The icon will appear in the Photoshop menu when you are in Bridge mode. Select the star alignment FITS output in Bridge and choose one of the provided templates in the top portion of the software. A menu will appear that allows you to choose the fields you wish to extract from the FITS file. Select the fields you wish to include in the star mask. Place a marker over the region that you wish to use and the software will trim the original image down to that region. I think the software that's out there today is more user friendly, but it's probably for the better. With a good program, it's less likely you'll end up with a zipped file that is half loaded and hasn't been saved to the hard drive. AstroVise is a fully functional astroimaging tool - it features a graphical user interface, is highly configurable, and has a large number of features. The AstroVise software is a new, free, visual astroimaging app, that runs on a Windows computer. It has AstroView (available as a monthly subscription), which shows the movement of the Moon and planets in the night sky for the current date (including optionally a detailed explanation and a list of the 20 closest/farthest objects). AstroVise also has the ability to view Jupiter, Saturn, and other objects, and the ability to print or export pictures and movies. Tessellation allows the user to capture an object that is smaller than the 35mm format field of view in just a few seconds. From a rolling shutter camera to an array of CCDs, the cameras are exposed to cosmic radiation for an entire night's worth of time. With a simple set of software and a $6,000 microscope you can expose and record an image of a beautiful specimen such as a moth, flea, butterfly or spider with tens of thousands of black and white pictures.
