This list contains only one item (at the moment), and its instance is held by a controller's Session. The list is populated in the controller's OnActionExecuted. When I click an edit button that sends a request to a controller method that retrieves this item from the Session, I want to be able to remove this item (not just the item's contents, but the item itself) from the list in the singleton. I'm using MVC2 and in the controller, the list is of type IList. My first instinct was to create a "remove" button, but of course, this doesn't work when the list is the singleton's property. I was thinking I could write a custom attribute that overrides the HttpPost action that handles the removal (or perhaps just sets a flag in the Session), but I don't know if this is the best approach. Does anyone have any suggestions? A: It sounds like you're looking for something like:
