What's the problem with Fuji cameras not having X-Trans RAW conversion? You think that's odd? Try this: You want to convert a RAW file from the Fuji X-E1, but can't find the RAW converter that the Fuji X-E2 has. It's even worse with all three X-T1-compatible Sony lenses I tried. When I plug-in the X-E2-compatible Fujifilm USM-F2 superzoom to it, it just says "RAW converter not installed". To be quite frank, I don't believe this. It's not a camera-specific issue, but the firmware. I would have thought that Fujifilm would at least have pushed this update to Fujifilm X-E1 and X-E2 cameras, some of which have been on the market ages by now and not offering RAW conversion. If Sony had not changed the RAW format, RW2 files would have been a wonderful thing. There would be no proprietary limitations. RAW would be RAW. That being said, X-Trans RAW conversion is still limited and it's quite obvious that RAW support is a high priority for Fujifilm. If it takes them over a year to roll out firmware, make the raw converter available for outside developers and provide USB hosts (like X-Sync firmware updates), I mean better yet, share the source code for X-Trans RAW conversion with outside developers to help them out. It's not that hard. The raw converter fails to convert many RAW files. This makes sense in light of how limited a feature it really is at the moment. The best part of this product is the file browser plug-in. It's nice to be able to view the folder structure of the raw files right within the application. It's also good that it's easy to change the folder structure. I hope for other plugins as well, for example a DNG browser plugin.

What It Does: The Spot Healing tool is similar to the Clone Stamp tool, but it can only change the color of one area at a time. This can be useful for correcting small shadows in an image where the shadow areas are not connected. Once the shadow areas are connected, you would use the Clone Stamp to fill in the shadow area with the background color. The Content Aware tool is similar to the Clone Stamp tool. It allows you to select an area of an image and then use that area as a reference to clean other areas that do not match that reference. Temperature adjustment is the only difference between the Spot Healing tool and the Content Aware tool. The Temperature adjustment means that only color areas can be changed, while the Content Aware tool changes all areas of the image at once. What It Does: The Healing brush can be used to restore an image. Sometimes you want to fix an image that has been damaged (or not damaged, but it doesn't look like it should). The Healing brush can be used to reestablish the image's white balance or fix imperfections such as spots or scratches. The Adjustment Layers function is useful for reaching a custom tonal effect without having to use all of the sliders on the layer panel at once. The Slider controls show a thumbnail that displays the channel you are adjusting and for each slider control on the panel a range of values. This aids in selecting the correct value range for your channel. e3d0a04c9c

This means storing image data in the cloud for access anywhere, storing shared edits and metadata, and syncing changes back to the device.
