The present invention is related to a vehicle speed control system for vehicles, especially automobiles, which can achieve a feedback control for the speed of a vehicle by using a speed sensor and a proportional speed accelerator (the term "proportional accelerator" will be used hereinafter to stand for a conventional or future speed booster) which is actuated by a driver's depression of a gas pedal with a predetermined operation amount according to his/her moving intent. The latest automobile speed control systems generally employ a closed loop control which is provided with a slip threshold. More specifically, when a vehicle speed  $V$  is higher than a predetermined speed (vehicle speed limit)  $V_{sl}$  by a predetermined amount, the speed  $V$  is feedback-controlled within a range of a limit speed  $V_{ref}$  which is determined in a feedback manner so as to not cause the slip threshold to be exceeded. The feedback control includes an proportional control by which a proper amount of operation amount is transmitted to the proportional accelerator and a fixed amount of operation by which a predetermined operation amount is transmitted to the proportional accelerator. The fixed
