D-Day: World War II codenames and Allied invasion Imperial War Museum The United States was granted a colony by King George III of Great Britain on July 4, 1776. Included in this grant was what is now the state of Massachusetts; specifically, the settlement of Boston (pronounced "Bos-ton"). The British settlement of Halifax, Nova Scotia, was founded in 1749, with Cape Elizabeth further up the coast. The first settlement in Newfoundland was founded in 1610 as well. Prince Edward Island, while not a colony of the British Empire, was a part of Nova Scotia until 1873. The British also formed a colony in Canada, named Quebec, but it was conquered by France and later established its independence as the Canadian province of Quebec. In modern history, Nova Scotia, the former colony of Prince Edward Island, Newfoundland, and parts of New Brunswick were merged into the Maritime Provinces of Canada in 1953. Canada's tricolor is a union of the red, white and blue of Great Britain's royal flag, and the white and red of the Irish tricolor. In 1916, Newfoundland and Labrador joined Canada as its tenth province. These historic connections have resulted in numerous ethnic and regional nicknames and names for the American English and Canadian English speaking residents of North America: The Statesman from Boston, Massachusetts; the Carolinas; the Canadians; and the Quebecers. The Statesmen are commonly associated with the American Revolution, in the phrase "Gentlemen, start your revolvers". The Carolinians are commonly associated with the Trans-Appalachian West. The majority of immigrants to Canada come from British dominions in Central and South Asia. In the United States, the majority of immigrants come from the Latin American or Caribbean regions, especially Mexico. In 1820, the first non-indigenous Americans settled in what is now the state of Maine. Immigrant workers brought with them skills such as beekeeping, boatbuilding, and the development of a number of textile-based products, including the zipper. The Scots have also played an important role in the development of modern American culture. A majority of the immigrants who came to the United States spoke English as a first language. Over the course of the twentieth century, the immigrant population and the native born population of the United States became more ethnically homogeneous, due to Ellis Island being discontinued in Britain — including the British dependencies in Canada, Australia, and New
