Learn more about Bonus Vehicles and Videos.A digital X-ray imaging system, such as the new digital X-ray imaging system, Digital X-ray Imaging System (DXIS), developed by the assignee of the present invention, is disclosed in U.S. Pat. No. 6,477,851, entitled "Digital X-ray Imaging System," issued to Parks et al. on Oct. 2, 2002, incorporated herein by reference. This DXIS permits a technician to identify anatomical structures on an X-ray image. The X-ray image is provided in a digital format on a display such as a cathode ray tube (CRT) display. It is possible to enhance the visibility of anatomical structures using windowing, overlaying, contrast, and other techniques. The DXIS also permits the technician to obtain images of an anatomical structure, such as a heart, and correlate or tag them with a related image, such as a fluoroscopic or other X-ray image, so that the related image may be viewed simultaneously with the digital X-ray image on the display screen. These types of images, generated via digital imaging, are referred to as images, views, or viewsets. The creation of a new image, or the editing of an existing image, such as correcting a bright-brightness error, is commonly accomplished by changing the intensity or signal-to-noise ratio of the region of interest in the new or edited image. There are several known ways to accomplish this, including, for example, the operator selecting a windowing function in conjunction with a new or edited image on a display, and applying the windowing function to the displayed image. One problem with this method is that it requires manual intervention, and requires the operator to perform the windowing function in conjunction with the new or edited image and then press a button to apply the windowing function to the displayed image. Another type of edit tool for a digital X-ray imaging system utilizes an automatic method. With this method, a window function is applied automatically to a frame or view with a predetermined profile associated with a medical image. To perform this method, the manufacturer must provide the operator with all of the frames or views that are stored in the system. The method selects the first profile in the series of profiles and applies the automatic windowing function
